This is one reason why Telugu is spoken in Telangana — the language is spoken in the northern part of the state, which had been part of the British India. However, in the 20th century when the Indian economy was rising, the Tamil language started losing ground among the people and now it is completely unknown. The linguistic loss was made worse by British invasion, which caused many languages, such as Telugu, to be spoken in Pakistan. In fact, Tamil was only spoken in southern Telangana. But thanks to the efforts of a few writers, Tamil has now made remarkable progress in recent years (as it did in the 1920s) and can be considered to be a second language. Telugu, on the other hand, has lost most of its linguistic features, and even today it is spoken in only 10-15 areas. Despite these difficulties, Telugu dialects spread far across the state..
